From the Rabbi...

In the month of March, we celebrate the holiday of Purim. A time of prizes, noisemakers, costumes and treats. Purim invites us to celebrate the absurd and laugh at ourselves. As we read the story from the Purim Megillah (scroll), we drown out the name of Haman, the evil man of Sushan who sought to destroy the Jewish people. Dressing in costume, eating the three cornered hamentaschen cookies, making noise, and celebrating beyond comprehension all draw our attention to the fun and frivolity of the day. And, of all of our holidays, it is about Purim which the Midrash on the book of Proverbs proclaims: 'All holidays will in the future be annulled, yet the days of Purim will never be annulled.'

What is it about Purim that makes it the one holiday our rabbis say will endure even in the messianic area? In the moments of the arrival of the complete and final redemption, is it really possible that the most important Jewish moment would be the one holiday when our frolic and celebration leads us as Purim asks us to go – beyond comprehension between good and evil 'ad sh'lo yada – until it is impossible to know the distinction between Haman and Mordechai'?

It would be far easier to understand any one of several of our other holidays to be the one holiday that would endure beyond this world. After all, Purim is certainly not the holiday most of us would naturally identify as being the most important one or perhaps the most significant one. The reenactment of the exodus from Egypt and the telling of the Master Story of our people associated with Passover feels far more significant and far-reaching. Were it not for that experience, our people might never have found our way to Mt. Sinai to receive God's Torah. Likewise, Yom Kippur's process of personal and communal repentance and return seems more naturally a part of the enduring growth and development of the Jewish soul and of the Jewish people. Or, perhaps one of the many other holidays as well. So, why Purim?

The answer it seems to me lies in the Megillah itself – in the story of Purim itself. Or, rather, what is not in the story. In the entire narrative of the book of Esther, one character seems to be absent. The king signs Haman's plan as an edict: the Jews are to be killed. Mordechai tells Esther that the Jews need her intervention. Initially hesitant to do so, Esther goes to ask the King to spare the Jewish people. Esther warns Mordechai that no one, except those to whom the king holds out his golden scepter comes to the inner court on orders of death. Mordechai, in turn, warns Esther not to think that just because she is in the palace she would escape the fate of the rest of her nation. Esther's reaction is to instruct Mordechai to gather all the Jews who are present in Shushan to fast for Esther. Esther wines and dines the king, reveals to him that she is Jewish and convinces him to save her people. Haman is hung on the very day he drew to destroy the Jewish people.

So, who is missing?

God! No where in the entire narrative is God's name mentioned – not even once. What an absurd idea for us – a Jewish holiday whose primary narrative doesn't mention God? In all other holidays, the narrative of the holiday makes clear God's appearance and instruction. On Passover, we speak of God's role in bringing about the redemption from slavery; on Yom Kippur it's from God whom we seek to absolve ourselves of our vows; on Shavuot, it is God who reveals God's Torah atop Mt. Sinai. And the list could go on for all other holidays except Purim. Only on Purim is God's name left out of the narrative of the day. How is it that the one day which marks God's absence is the one enduring day into the messianic era?

In a discussion on Esther's approaching the king, the Talmudic rabbi, Rabbi Levi, records a similar discomfort with God's absence in the story of Esther. Looking at the verse from the scroll of Esther, "And she stood in the inner court of the king's house," he laments that to enter the inner most chambers of any king other than God leads to idol worship. And, so he superimposes the image of Esther speaking the words of the book of Psalms to God in that moment: 'Eli, Eli, lamah azavtani – My God, my God, why have you abandoned me?'

Yet, Esther was not paralyzed by the experience. From the inner court of the king, she moves to stand in front of the king and bear her soul to him in the hope that she, Mordechai, and the entire Jewish community would be spared. She reveals Haman's plan to the king, and it is Haman whose demise is ultimately brought on the very day he chose to destroy the Jewish people. She could not wait for Mordechai or any one else to act in the world, but she herself had to dig within herself to find the courage and faith to stand up against evil and cry for justice in the world, even knowing that she could have to pay the price for approaching the king in her unorthodox ways. And indeed God sat with her in those moments.

God does not want each of us to wait for others to act to bring justice, nor does God want us to assume it can be done by God alone (regardless of whether or not we believe that God has the power and ability to do so). Esther helped bring God into the world and fulfill her divine mission when she took those steps to approach the king and to fight for her people. Like, her, we too help manifest God's presence in the world when we make God's implicit presence explicit in the ways we act and in the justice we seek. And, when we do so, we move one step closer to the fulfillment of our divine mission and to a world in which salvation is truly possible and probable. This is our mission, this is our hope.

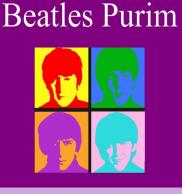

Purim Sameach.

🐇 Notes From The Cantor 🐇

Ben Steinberg Z"L (January 22, 1930-February 10, 2023) The world of Jewish music, Reform Jewish music in particular, lost a giant this past month. During the High Holy Days, and on many Friday nights as well, we've chanted a beautiful, contemplative version of Shalom Rav, with the sweet harmonies, grace notes, and melismatic phrases for which a certain Jewish composer is known. We've chanted both the High Holy Day version and the Shabbat version. Here is part of it. https:// youtu.be/GNeLHwwp2yl Ben Steinberg Z"L (January 22, 1930-February 10, 2023) was a prolific Canadian Jewish composer, conductor, music educator, and organist whose music elevated our Reform Jewish worship to angelic levels of beauty. The national professional organization to which I belong is the American Conference of Cantors of which Ben Steinberg was made an honorary member, having been one of the founding members of our associate organization, the Guild of Temple Musicians. When the Guild of Temple Musicians wishes to give its most prestigious award to a young composer of Jewish Music, it is an award named after Ben Steinberg. The largest and oldest publisher of Jewish Music is called Transcontinental Music Publications, of which Steinberg is a prominently featured composer. TMP published several of his sacred services and several of his choral, organ, orchestral, and vocal works, including The Vision of Isaiah (1970) for tenor, choir, and organ or instrumental ensemble; Yerushalayim (1973) for soprano, choir, and orchestra; and Echoes of Children (1979), a cantata for soloist, narrator, chorus, and orchestra. Echoes of Children won the International Gabriel Award and was twice performed on PBS. Ben Steinberg was born in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada, the son of Cantor Alexander Steinberg, who was also a conductor. By the age of eight he was singing as a soloist with his father's synagogue choir. He later went on to study at the Royal Conservatory of Music and the University of Toronto where he earned a Bachelor of Music in 1961. It was at Toronto's Holy Blossom Temple where Steinberg started as the appointed director of the school's music program, and was later promoted to being the Temple's Music Director. He remained in that post until he became music director at Temple Sinai in 1970. From 1953-1958 he taught at various public schools in the Toronto area. He headed the Music Departments at both Winston Churchill and Forest Hill Collegiate Institutes. In 1961, the URJ, then the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, published a Youth Choir method book of his called, Together Do They Sing. He was the Artist in Residence in several places including the city of Jerusalem, and was commissioned to write a total of 18 compositions by temples, synagogues, and congregations in the USA between 1980 and 1991. Ben Steinberg's soulful setting of Esa Einai is a staple at many Reform Yizkor services and funerals.

Congregational Meeting Sunday, March 12th 10:00 am

Information will be emailed and snail mailed out!

From the President...

My Temple Family,

I am thrilled to see the great response we get for special programs like the Welcome to Our New Home, Shabbat Shira as a Rock Shabbat, and the Tu B'Shevat Seder. I would like to create a program committee. If you want to help or if you have an idea, please contact me. With support we would be able to do more events.

In addition to the Rabbi's Haftarah/Prophet Zoom class on Tuesday mornings, and the Shabbat Minyan on Saturday mornings also on Zoom, we have lots of other special programming. Check out the events for March.

Starting Thursday, March 2nd, Cantor Rosenman begins his Ladino/ Sephardic Folk Song and Art Song Class. Cantor's knowledge of music is amazing and I learn something at every class.

We are celebrating Purim on Friday, March 10. After an abbreviated Shabbat service, we will read the Megillah and all participate in the Beatles Purim Shpiel. We are probably all familiar with the Beatles songs so we'll be able to sing along. Afterward, a light dinner of soup, wraps and salad will be served along side the oneg goodies. Please RSVP if you are attending in person so we can insure sufficient food.

Watch your email for the link to our Zoom Congregational Meeting scheduled for March 12. We will be discussing our plan for the future and answering all your questions.

On Monday, March 13, Rabbi Emeritus Josh Goldstein's monthly series reflection is titled "Say Goodbye: The Last Conversation." This will not be his last presentation for this Temple year. That is scheduled for April 10.

On Sunday, March 19, we will gather at Hanson Park in Cranford for a Mitzvah Project at 1 pm. We will do a spring clean-up. It involves picking up fallen branches, cleaning out sign beds, the herb garden and urns, planting pansies, and restoring the gravel and wood chip paths. Since last year's ceremony remembering Jan Lillian, a wonderful sculpture has been added to the garden. Consult the scroll flyer for more information.

On Friday, March 24, Kyle Sargis will lead us in Kiddush and on Saturday, March 25 we will celebrate his becoming a Bar Mitzvah.

We are here for you, we need you to be here for us. Remember the lesson Jethro, Moses' father-in-law, taught. In order to prevent burnout, the work should be divided so others can assist. It takes a community to create a community. Let us know how you can help. Please let the Office know if there is anyone in the Congregation that is sick, in the hospital, or if there is a death in the Congregation. You can email the Temple office scroll@shaarey.org, call the Temple office 973-379-5387 or email the Rabbi at rabbirenee@gmail.com PLEASE NOTE! The next Scroll will be for April, THE DEADLINE FOR THE ARTICLES IS MARCH 8, 2023

Jewish songs come in many languages. One such prominent language is Ladino, also known as Judeo Espagnole, a form of Hebrew-infused Castilian Spanish found everywhere in the world to which Sephardic Jews fled after the Expulsion from Spain in 1492. This class explores the Sephardic side of our vast treasure trove of Jewish music.
